Israeli Planners Say President Johnson's Pledge To Solve Water Shortage Looks To Future; For Now Will Take Water From Lake Tiberias

Israelis welcomed President Johnson's proposal of cooperative research in the use of nuclear power to help solve the Middle East's water shortage, but they do not see it as an answer to current problems.

President Johnson's disclosure of an offer of United States cooperation with Israel on research for desalting sea water was received in the Arab world like a blow in the face, says the New York Times. Ignoring Mr. Johnson's offer to cooperate also with other countries, press editorials interpreted the President's speech along these lines:

Just when Arab chiefs of state have met to devise means of heading off Israel's diversion of Jordan River waters, the United States Government first issues a statement through U. Alexis Johnson, Deputy Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs. The statement, the Arabs say, warns them not to use force.

Then Washington indicates willingness to send troops to Cyprus where they could be used for Israel's protection.

Then, the Arabs declare, the United States doubles the number of its marines in the Mediterranean and now the President wants to help the Israelis distill sea water.

"Johnson, the Jew," wrote Michel Abdu Jawdeh, a columnist on Al Nahar, the Beirut newspaper. He said the speech was "serious because it has officially revealed American-Israeli cooperation in nuclear research at the Rehovot nuclear center, which has been evoking Arab fears because of the possibility that Israel may develop the atomic bomb."

He called the speech equal in importance to United States recognition of Israel as a state. He said: "The speech goes beyond recognition of the birth of Israel to recognition of Israel's future — as if Israel were America's '51st state!', reports the New York Times. The Beirut newspaper, Al Kifah, found it interesting that the announcement of the United States offer to Israel was made at a dinner of the American Committee for the Weizmann Institute.

The newspaper recalled that it was Dr. Chaim Weizmann, Israel's first President, who brought about the Balfour Declaration recognising Palestine as a Jewish national home. The editorial went on: "As Weizmann was able to secure a promise for stealing Palestine from the Arabs, his spirit has now acquired another promise for stealing Arab waters."

In Damascus, the Government newspaper, Al Thawra, viewed President Johnson's speech as the ultimate in American support of Israel. It said that Arabs were determined to defend their rights.

"Our sorrow over the late President Kennedy has become deeper," said Ahmad Shukairy, Palestinian representative in the Arab League, in Cairo. Commenting on President Johnson's speech, he added: "If Weizmann himself had risen from his grave he would not have praised Israel more than Johnson did."

Mr. Johnson's speech was printed on the front pages of Egyptian newspapers. Al Ahram also carried President Gamal Abdel Nasser's interview with the Indian weekly, Blitz, in which Mr. Nasser said that war with Israel "could possibly break out any moment."

President Johnson had said in New York that the United States had offered to cooperate with Israel in using nuclear power to help solve the water shortage in the Middle East. Israel has indicated she will divert water from the Jordan River to meet her needs — a project that threatens war between Israel and the Arab States.

Mr. Johnson said the U.S. had begun discussions with representatives of Israel on cooperative research to turn salt water into fresh water by the use of nuclear power, reports the New York Times. The President, speaking in the Waldorf-Astoria at the annual dinner of the American Committee for the Weizmann Institute of Science, did not mention Israel's projected diversion of water from the Jordan. He did stress, however, the importance of finding a peaceful solution to the recurrent crisis.

"Water should never be a cause of war — it should always be a force for peace," the President solemnly told more than 1,700 guests. And he added: "Peace is first on our agenda."

Planners in Israel believe that the conversion of salt water into sea water will be economically feasible only in the next decade. Meanwhile, they are going ahead with final preparations to take water from Lake Tiberias despite the Arabs' threat to cut off headwaters of rivers feeding the lake.

The Israelis need the water urgently because wells along the Mediterranean coast have already been overpumped and sea water has begun to filter in. Also, new cities rising in the south require water.

A United States expert said that a nuclear reactor 30 to 40 times as large as the one nearing completion at Dimona, in the Negev, will be required to produce fresh water at reasonable cost. He said that even if work started next week it could not be completed in this decade.

The United States has been cooperating with Israel for several years on some aspects of water desalinization and nuclear research. A small experimental reactor has been built with American help under President Dwight D. Eisenhower's Atoms for Peace program. It is now in operation.

The two countries have also exchanged information about desalinization and Israel has been working on two experimental systems. A plant will be opened soon in Elath. It operates by freezing sea water in a vacuum and then melting the ice, says the New York Times. An American company has entered a partnership with the Israeli Government to promote that method commercially.

A small plant using the electrodialytic method — in which salt is removed from the water by electric currents — is operating at the Arid Zone Research Center in Beersheba. A United States expert said nuclear power would benefit the latter method more.

The United States Atomic energy Commission has given Israel a report on a feasibility study of atomic reactors for desalting sea water. Dr. Alvin Weinberg, director of the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, who is especially interested in the subject, has toured Israel and has been in communication with Israeli representatives.

Arab suspicion of United States intentions in the Middle East was aroused by a United States policy speech in Washington quickly followed by a proposal that the United States participate in an international military force that would be sent to Cyprus to enforce peace.

The Arabs suspect that both moves are intended ultimately to support Israel against the Arabs, and most immediately in their dispute over the Jordan River waters.

Soviet propagandists are exploiting this situation by playing on the Arab's fears and by posing as a friend of the Arabs against the Western powers and Israel.

The uproar started following a speech by U. Alexis Johnson, Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs, on January 20, three days after the Arab chiefs of state met in Cairo to devise means of halting Israel's Jordan River diversion plan. In his speech Mr. Johnson restated United States Middle Eastern policy, including opposition to aggression from any side.

The Arabs took his words as a warning to them not to attack Israel either militarily or by diverting the Jordan waters before they reach Israel. From this point on both Cairo and Damascus have raised the alarm, says the New York Times, Cairo editors recalled the sending of foreign forces in the Suez campaign of 1956 and hinted that "another Suez," this time involving the United States, might be impending.

The Damascus radio summarized its fears as follows: "The landing of foreign forces in Cyprus is but an excuse for interference by these forces in the internal affairs of the Arab states when necessary."

Foreign Minister Hussam Mreiwed of Syria called in the Turkish and Soviet Foreign Ministers for consultation. The Syrian Minister of Information, Dr. Sami al Joundi, declared in a television interview that the landing of Western troops in Cyprus would not affect the Arab position.

He also said Syria would act to stop Israel from carrying out her Jordan River plans should the Israelis attempt to do so before the Arabs complete their plan of diverting the Jordan tributaries.

Al Thawra, the official organ in Damascus, urged the Arab states to reconsider their relations with the United States. Al Baath, the newspaper of the ruling Bathist party, praised the Soviet Union's stand on the river issue.

A columnist in Beirut's independent newspaper, Al Nahar, called Cyprus the Arab's Cuba. "The Arabs have the right and duty," he said, "to declare their opposition to the landing of foreign troops on the island" because NATO forces "would eventually be used to obstruct Arab plans seek-

Israel Gives Jew, Polish Ghetto Official, Five-Year Prison Term For Aid To Nazis

Three judges in Tel Aviv found a Polish Jewish refugee guilty of driving fifty Jewish orphans from a hiding place and handing them over to the Nazis for deportation. The Tel Aviv District Court also found Hirsch Barenblatt, war-time commander of the Jewish Militia in the ghetto of Bendzin, Poland, says the New York Herald Tribune, guilty of preventing escapes while the Nazis decided who, among 15,000 ghetto Jews, should be deported and who should remain.

Barenblatt, the court held, knew what awaited the deportees — death in Auschwitz. He was sentenced to five years imprisonment on five out of seven counts of violating the Nazi and Nazi-Collaborators' Punishment act, the law under which Adolf Eichmann was tried. The maximum possible sentence was ten years.

The accused, who was chorus master of the Israel National Opera when a Bendin survivor recognized him and went to the police, does not know Hebrew and did not understand the sentence.

He had apparently been hoping for a lighter sentence. When his attorney whispered the news to him, Barenblatt screamed repeatedly in Yiddish: "Fur wus? For What?"

Barenblatt's young third wife threw her arms around him, and they both cried. His divorced second wife, one-time runner for the Bendin Jewish underground, says the New York Herald Tribune, tried to comfort them, while a laughing group of black-jacketed young Israelis gathered round the trio and made derogatory remarks until police ejected them.

The first Jew to be convicted for having collaborated with the Nazis as a Jewish community official was sentenced to five years' imprisonment, says the New York Times. Hirsch Barenblatt, 49 years old, whose conviction was announced at the same time, as head of the Judenrat's militia in Bendzin, Poland, during World War II, was thus also chief of the police arm of

STAGE WHISPER OF JEWISH WITNESS AT NAZI TRIAL OF 22 BRINGS IN ANNE FRANK AND MILLIONS OF OTHER GHOSTS TO HAUNT THE MEMORY

A small and discreet legend marks the house in Amsterdam at Prinsengracht 263: "Anne Frank Huis" it reads, and a translation isn't necessary. A couple of steps from a dank canal, the narrow house, four stories high with the slanted roofs of the picturesque posters, broods as a throbbing reminder of the recent past. Inside, Anne Frank spent some of the happiest — and most pathetic — times of her young life. Her story, "The Diary of a Young Girl," is known wherever men read, says the New York Herald Tribune. But a brief facet of her pathetic years is still something of recondite history. Anne Frank, her older sister, Margo, her father, Otto, and her mother were for a few months in Auschwitz.

The awful fate that befell all the Franks except the father, snuffed out millions of lives. Concentration camps, run by the Nazis were unspeakable and the names became a nightmare in history. By chance, though, Anne Frank ripped swiftly through the memory of a courtroom sitting in solemn judgment at Frankfurt, Germany, a few hundred miles away from the house in Amsterdam.

It came in the course of tortuous testimony by one of the twenty-two defendants on trial for their role at Auschwitz. The high-pitched voice of a beefy ex-guard droned in dreadful detail. "Fresh transports kept coming," he recalled as if it happened yesterday. "More and more Jews were arriving. In the autumn of 1944, I remember how tired we were just getting them to stand up in ranks — women and children, one side; men, the other.

"My God," one of the prosecution witnesses murmured. "Anne Frank was in one of those groups." His stage whisper volleyed in volume through the courtroom. Frail and incredibly aged beyond his years, the man put his hands to his face. His life had been wrecked in a camp. Yet the thought transcending his own horror was Anne Frank's.

Among the prisoners, each with a uniformed policeman beside him, there was not a tremor of reaction. The court rapped briefly and sharply for order. Testimony continued, but the haunting features of Anne Frank seemed to epitomize the ghosts of four million who perished at Auschwitz, says the New York Herald Tribune. As the world is aware, Anne died in Bergen-Belsen. Between camps, she, with her family, was cast into Auschwitz for a few months. This is largely forgotten, but it rekindles guilt and, for some, compels a quest or maybe a pilgrimage.

It is better to forget, contend critics of the Auschwitz trial, some of them good and well-intentioned people. "Today's problems are here with us and demand our attention." The human element or the lack of it, degradation or the right to upgrade humanity, cannot be shuffled like regimes. As memory, Anne Frank's, for example, can grow dim. It cannot be effaced.

Step into the house at Prinsengracht 263, Amsterdam. It is at least 300 years old and the stairs are steep, as they should be for the doughty seafaring men who built them. The first floor was where Anne's father kept a spice shop, the business he established after the family fled Hitler's Germany in 1933.

Up those sharply-inclined stairs, narrow for any one of bulk, and a couple of quiet rooms open to the right. Posters of Nazi commands, photos of human roundups, and a large chamber with chairs — simple and functional — catch the eye. Young people, from around the world, come to meet, to talk and to think of Anne Frank in that chamber. Like the legend on the door, it is in low-key, perhaps deliberately so.

Outside the chamber, near the landing, is the book-case. A few

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN TOY BOX AND CLOTHING PROGRAM THRILLS ISRAELI CHILDREN

Recently, Eliezer Whartman, a foreign correspondent living in Israel, accompanied a group of women soldiers in training for duty as kindergarten teachers in immigrant towns, on a tour of kindergartens in Beth Shemesh, a small community southwest of Jerusalem. They brought with them National Council of Jewish Women Ship-A-Box packages for two of the schools. Mr. Whartman's report follows:

The throng of children who had been impatiently awaiting us swept out of the school yard as soon as our car pulled up. Whooping with joy, they helped us to lift the heavy parcel out of the trunk compartment. Struggling to lend a hand to Hannah, their kindergarten teacher, they triumphantly carried the box of toys sent by the National Council of Jewish Women into the Alonim kindergarten of Beth Shemesh, an immigrant town twelve miles southwest of Jerusalem.

They gathered breathlessly around the large carton as Hannah carefully opened it. She reached in and pulled out — a tricycle. For a moment there was absolute silence in the room as the children stared in awe; then the walls shook with shrieks of amazement and delight. As soon as it touched the ground, Nissim, a four-year-old newcomer from Iran, was already perched on it, crowing for joy. The tricycle was followed by dolls, a miniature kitchen set, and a baby carriage, which sent the little girls into paroxysms of ecstasy.

Most of the children had never held a doll before. Indeed, one little girl who had arrived from Morocco the week before had never even seen one and appeared stunned at the sight.

It was the second parcel we delivered that day to a kindergarten in Beth Shemesh. As a "hardened" newspaper man, I confess that the sight of the children fondling the toys had me reaching for my handkerchief.

It was a scene that was being repeated a number of times that day: in a kindergarten for physically handicapped tots in the Galilee; in a school for deaf children in Beersheba; in a day center for orthogenically backward youngsters (imbeciles and idiots) in Tel Aviv; and in an institute for the blind in Jerusalem, where children, locked in a prison of darkness, reached out to clasp a toy, a gentle messenger of love from another world.

Curious to see the homes of the children from the Alonim kindergarten, I paid a visit to the family of two children selected at random. Flora Ben Yehuda, a charming little girl of five, and her four-year-old brother, Yehuda, led the way to a rather depressing two-room apartment which they shared with a younger brother and their parents, newcomers from Iran. Mr. Ben Yehuda is an apprentice diamond polisher and earns a monthly salary of $44.

I asked Mrs. Ben Yehuda to let us photograph the children playing with some of their toys. She shrugged. There wasn't a toy in the house. There never had been. Well, perhaps a picture book, I suggested. Mrs. Ben Yehuda shrugged again. So I went back to the school, borrowed two of the toys we had delivered that morning, and photographed the children playing with them. I'll never do a thing like that again. Afterwards I had the unenviable task of taking the toys away and returning them to the kindergarten. They've got to be shared by the other children.

"It's not an unusual family," observed Dr. S. Fayance-Glueck, Chief Inspector of Kindergartens of the Ministry of Education and Culture, when I reported the incident to her. "Many of the children have never possessed a toy in their lives. Generally, it's a reflection of poverty, but occasionally we have to remind newcomers, particularly from Moslem lands, that a child needs a toy as much as he needs air. We'd like to give each child a plaything of his own, but we've got thousands of kindergartens to care for, so the toys must be shared. We allow the children to borrow books, but have to draw the line on toys. There's just no budget for them, and many of the kindergartens are forced to improvise, using whatever comes to hand: matchbook covers, cigarette packages, odd scraps of paper, anything. A toy is a godsend, not only for the child, but for the teacher as well."

The National Council of Jewish Women embarked on its Ship-A-Box program to Israel thirteen years ago. It began after World War II by shipping boxes to children in France, Holland, Belgium, Poland, and Czechoslovakia. When the Iron Curtain came down over the last two countries, Council began shipments to Morocco, Tunisia, and Israel.

The Council has sent over 20,000 Ship-A-Box packages to Israel. Toys and new clothing (much of it knitted in Council-sponsored Golden Age Clubs) are dispatched to a warehouse connected with the Ministry of Welfare; other toy shipments are sent to two warehouses maintained by the Ministry of Education and culture, one warehouse serving regular Kindergartens, and the other for tots receiving special education because of physical or mental handicaps.

The National Council of Jewish Women, with 128,000 members in 329 affiliated local units throughout the U.S., also provides Fellowships for U.S. graduate study to top-level educators and social workers from Israel and other Jewish communities abroad, provides a major share of support to the John Dewey School of Education of the Hebrew University, and has built a new campus of buildings for the Model Hebrew University High School in Jerusalem. In the U.S., the Council maintains nearly 1,000 community services and a broad adult education-public affairs program.

At the Ministry of Welfare warehouse I found Mrs. Hava Magnes and Mrs. Bernard Neumann knee deep in toys which had just been unpacked from one of the boxes. Hava was trying to explain to the directors of two youth centers that the demands made upon the warehouse far exceeded supplies, and that they would have to wait their turn. They pleaded eloquently, describing their underequipped centers struggling to meet the needs of burgeoning communities, and in the end departed with a basketball and soccer ball apiece to tide them over until a package could be sent.

"There's just no end to requests," sighed Hava. A volunteer, she is an alumna of the Council's Fellowships for volunteer leaders from Jewish communities abroad to study community organization in the U.S. Hava comes in twice a week to unpack parcels and make them up into special consignments to meet the needs of the hundreds of institutes served by the Ship-A-Box program.

MARRIAGES

KORNBLUTH-AUERBACH

The marriage of Miss Arlene Judith Auerbach, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Z. Bryant Auerbach, 4979 Jean Brillant Avenue, to Harvey Ira Kornbluth, son of Mr. and Mrs. Max Kornbluth, 975 Hartland Avenue, was solemnized at Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue, on Tuesday, January 7, at six o'clock, by Rabbi Wilfred Shuchat, assisted by Rabbi Charles Bender, Cantor Nathan Mendelson, and Reverend J. J. Fromm. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was gowned in white silk faille. The fitted bodice was made with Alencon lace, encrusted with seed-pearl-beads; and the chapel train extended from a bell-shaped skirt, which was appliqued with lace and seed-pearl-beads. Her short veil of tulle illusion was attached to a circlet of orange blossoms; and she carried a small cascade bouquet of white baby orchids, and stephanotis. Mrs. Murray Veroff was matron of honour, wearing a petal pink, peau de soie gown. The bodice and skirt were appliqued with Calais lace. She had a matching pill-box hat; and carried a muff of Sweetheart roses. Ralph Kornbluth was his brother's best man. The ushers were: David Kornbluth, Alan Stober, Herschel Caplan, Mervyn Brettschneider, Dr. Ronald Grossman, Murray Veroff, Melvin Charnay, Irving Ludmer, and Myer Werbin. Shaded pink roses, and snapdragons and candelabra decorated the Synagogue. Mrs. M. N. Fineberg played the wedding music. Later there was orchestra music. A reception was held in the Synagogue hall. Mrs. Auerbach, mother of the bride, wore a rose-coloured, silk gown. The bodice and back panel were appliqued with Guipure lace, worked with seed-pearl-beads; and she had a matching hat. Mrs. Kornbluth, mother of the groom, wore a blush-pink, peau de soie sheath, the bodice of which was jewelled. Her hat was of that shade. Their corsages were of white orchids. Mrs. Abraham Gasco, grandmother of the bride, wore a gold-coloured, lace gown, set over pink peau de soie. Her hat was pink; and she had a corsage of pink orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Ira Kornbluth spent their wedding trip in Miami, Florida; and Nassau, W.I., the bride going away in a cherry-red suit, trimmed with black beaver fur; and her corsage was of white orchids. Mr. Kornbluth is a graduate of Civil Engineering, of McGill University.

ELLMAN-SMORDIN

The marriage of Miss Helen Smordin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Allan Smordin, 4634 Dupuis Avenue, to Harold Jerome Ellman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Ellman, of Bronx, N. Y., was solemnized at Zichron Kedoshim Synagogue, on Sunday, November 17, at six o'clock, by Rabbi Jacob J. Zlotnick. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She wore a fitted, white, peau de soie, and lace gown, fashioned with a beaded bodice; scoop neckline; long sleeves; and full skirt which continued as a long train. Her tulle illusion veil was topped by a crown of crystals; and she carried a prayer book with white orchids. Mrs. Alex Witt was her cousin's matron of honour, wearing a pink, beaded, peau de soie gown; made with short sleeves; and lace appliqued on the full skirt. Her crown was of seed-pearl-beads; and she carried a bouquet of white orchids. Misses Jean Abramovitch, and Lillian Coisman, were bridesmaids, each wearing a pink, peau de soie gown, made with short sleeves; and a full skirt. They had pink hats; and carried bouquets of white, and pink carnations, and roses. Morrie Ellman was his brother's best man. The ushers were: Barry Smordin, brother of the bride; Morrie Gelfin, Barry Sculnick, Paul Sculnick, Leonard Sculnick, Saul Sculnick, Alex Witt, cousins of the bride; and Samuel Newborne. White, and pink roses, carnations, and chrysanthemums, arranged in standards with greenery, were the wedding flowers. An orchestra played the wedding music. One hundred and fifty guests were received in the Synagogue hall. Mrs. Smordin, mother of the bride, wore a pink, peau de soie sheath, appliqued with sequins; and cut with short sleeves. She had a pink pill-box hat. Mrs. Ellman, mother of the groom, wore a pink, beaded, chiffon gown, with short sleeves; and full skirt; and her hat matched it. Each had a corsage of white carnations. Mr. and Mrs. Harold Jerome Ellman spent their wedding trip at the Nevele Country Club, in Ellenville, N. Y., the bride departing in a green, knitted suit; with a corsage of yellow carnations. They have taken up residence in Bronx, N. Y. Here for the marriage were: Mr. and Mrs. Adolphe Ellman, parents of the groom; Morris Ellman, brother of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. L. Shulman, and Mr. and Mrs. B. Pascal, uncles, and aunts of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. M. Shulman, cousins of the bride; Miss Miriam Krause, and Samuel Newborne; all of New York.

LATIN AMERICAN JEWRIES ASK W.J.C. TO FIND RABBIS AND TEACHERS FOR THEM

A project, initiated by the World Jewish Congress in New York to find volunteers willing to serve in far-flung Jewish communities, has resulted in pleas for help from eleven Central and South American lands.

Early last year, Samuel Bronfman, chairman of the North American Executive, issued a call for volunteers to proceed to fill community posts in a number of Latin American lands. Since then, requests have been received from communities in Bolivia, Colombia, Curaçao, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, and Surinam. In addition, the project produced a request from the Jewish community in Yugoslavia for assistance in the same area.

Mr. Bronfman's initiative was taken as a result of a gathering series of requests from a number of small communities for assistance in finding community personnel. There were obvious problems confronting these communities, problems involving language difficulties, remoteness, and even problems concerning housing, salaries, and so forth.

Following Mr. Bronfman's instructions, the office of the Cultural Department of the WJC in New York, under Dr. G. Beigel, sought to ascertain the needs of smaller communities for community personnel and simultaneously attempted to mobilize personnel through a variety of contacts with rabbinical seminaries, teaching colleges, and other institutions both in the United States and in the greater Latin American communities of Argentina and Brazil.

Attempts to find candidates willing to go to outlying Jewish communities at first produced only meager results since the demand for graduates of rabbinical and teachers' seminaries in the United States by far exceeds the supply. However, as the World Jewish Congress initiative in this field became more widely known, a number of volunteers came forward who either felt that they wanted to gather experience in far places or make a personal contribution to help the continuation of Jewish life in far-flung communities. In the main, the requests being received by the World Jewish Congress are for rabbis and teachers.

A report concerning the situation of the Jewish community in Panama has been received by the World Jewish Congress headquarters in New York from Moises A. Mizrachi, president of the Sephardic Jewish Community, who states that there were no casualties among the 1,800 Jews in the country. Mr. Mizrachi said however, that many Jews suffered considerable material damage as a result of vandalism and robberies of business premises during the rioting.

Though the situation was becoming more normal day by day, there is still some tension and the community hopes, that "we shall not witness again such painful events." Most of Panama's 1,800 Jews live in Panama City, with a smaller community in Colon, and are affiliated with the World Jewish Congress.

I rapped on the table and I shouted:

"You call that collective bargaining? I call it just plain 'chutzpah.'"

And I added:

"If 'Chutzpah' was brains, you fellows could be college professors instead of waiters."

I felt my partner tug at my sleeve. I heard him mumble: "Take it easy, Harry, you'll live longer." That's one of Moe's favorite expressions. But I continued my explosion:

"You men know that we have always been ready to talk with you about wages, hours, working conditions, fringe benefits. However, when it comes to running this restaurant, that's another matter. Moe and I own it and we intend to run it. Without the help of your committee!"

If you think my outburst disturbed the men, you're wrong. Sam, the shop chairman, took the floor. Sam is a good waiter and a fine man. Only he thinks that because his son is a lawyer, he has to talk to us as if he was addressing a jury.

"Boss," spoke Sam. "What you say is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. Paragraph 3, Subhead A in our last contract reads:—'All matters pertaining to the net earnings of the waiters shall be subject to discussion and/or arbitration.'"

"And what, may I ask," I asked sneeringly, "has all of that to do with the ketchup we serve?"

Sam had his answer ready.

"Boss," he said, pointing his finger dramatically, "the income of a waiter comes in good part from tips. It is well known in the trade that satisfied customers leave the biggest tips. If the service is good, if they like the food, they are generous. If not, the waiter feels it in his pocketbook. Not always! But often enough! When we hear wisecracks about the ketchup we serve, we find ....."

I interrupted Sam's speech. Now I was really angry.

"Nonsense," I shouted. "Utter nonsense! We serve a very good ketchup. And we serve it in a beautiful red plastic squeeze container. As you know well, Sam, our ketchup container even looks like a tomato."

"The only container the customers want," Sam countered, "is a glass ketchup bottle with a Heinz label. Heinz is the ketchup they see in all the best restaurants. It's what they expect to see on our tables. Just today, boss, one fellow said to me: 'Cutting corners a bit, aren't you, Sammy boy? If this was Heinz Ketchup, it would be too thick to go through this narrow tube.' Boss, that fellow deliberately left a dime under his plate. I lost more on that one tip than you saved on a whole quart of ketchup."

Any new outbreak on my part was prevented by my partner. Bless his sweet disposition! He urged the men to go back to their posts; he promised to take the matter up with me. Then Moe gave me the lecture I needed:

"Harry," he said, "Why must you treat every incident like a crisis? Why make a collective bargaining issue out of a good suggestion? You're afraid that if you give in on this one point, the men will try to tell us what prices to charge, what dishes should go on the menu. Let them tell us. Let's listen. Let's say thank you and adopt the good ideas and reject the others. Take it easy, Harry. You'll live longer."

There's no doubt of it. My temper is my worst enemy. I'm lucky that Moe is my partner.

Well, next day we called the men in and told them we were changing to Heinz Ketchup. Whether or not they were really losing tips is a question we did not try to decide. Who knows? Who cares? As Moe always says: "What's right is right, irregardless."

But now we have a new problem. What are we going to do with eighty-three red plastic tomatoes? Got any ideas?

Her bell-shaped, peau de soie skirt terminated in a cathedral train. Her fingertip veil was of Viennese lace, combined with a crystal crown; and she carried a white bible, adorned with white orchids, and stephanotis. Miss Beverley Fawn Belfer, sister of the bride, was maid of honour, attired in a sleeveless, pink, peau de soie, gown; styled with a heart-shaped neckline. Her flowers were a heart-shaped cascade bouquet, of white carnations, and pink, tinted roses. Her matching headpiece was trimmed with pearl beads. Her bridesmaids were: Misses Sippy Pilsmaker, Sharon Isaacs, Ricky Goldman, and Mrs. M. Naiman. Each wore a turquoise-blue, peau de soie gown, styled with a bell-shaped skirt, and bell sleeves; also a beaded headband; and carried a cascade bouquet of turquoise-blue, tinted carnations. Marlene Wagman, an attendant, cousin of the groom, was junior bridesmaid, dressed in turquoise-blue peau de soie, with a fitted bodice, and bell sleeves. Her flowers were a nosegay of turquoise-blue, tipped carnations, and a beaded headband. Ian Wagman, brother of the groom, was best man. The ushers were: Irving Knopman, Rickey Schragge, M. Naiman, Marvin Scharfe, Stanley Penzner, and Harold Offenheim. David, and Brian Slabodkin, cousins of the bride, were ring-bearers. The decorations in the Synagogue, and reception hall, were of turquoise-blue, and white, chrysanthemums, and carnations set in high standards. The wedding music was played by Murray Alter's orchestra. Mrs. Belfer, mother of the bride, wore a long gown of peacock-blue, peau de soie, completely embellished with beadwork, and appliqued with lace. The skirt was styled with two back panels, and had a semi-train. Mrs. Wagman, mother of the groom, wore a long, pale turquoise-blue, brocaded gown; with neckline traced with beadwork. Mrs. Harry Slabodkin, 1321 St. Claire Avenue West, grandmother of the bride, wore a turquoise-blue, peau de soie gown which had a modified, bell-shaped skirt trimmed with beadwork and appliqued with lace. Mrs. A. Wagman, 102 Beverley Street, grandmother of the groom, was gowned in a blue, lace, sheath gown. Each had a matching headpiece; and a corsage of orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Wagman spent their honeymoon in Mexico City, and Acapulco, Mexico, the bride travelling in a white, wool, two-piece, suit, and silk print hat. Her flowers were a corsage of orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Wagman have taken up residence at 1560 Lawrence Avenue West. Here from a distance for the occasion were: Dr. and Mrs. I. Slabodkin, and children, Clifford, and Melanie, of Buffalo, N.Y.; Mr. and Mrs. S. Belfer, and daughter, Virginia, of Galt, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. J. Wisotsky; Mr. and Mrs. M. Bogrow, and daughter, Sharyl, and sons, Jeffrey, Martin, and Eric; and Mrs. J. Friedman, and daughter, Anita Beth; all of Detroit, Mich., uncles, and aunts, and cousins of the bride; and Mr. and Mrs. B. Rovzen, of Montreal, Que.

Bnai Brith Links 14 Study Groups In 13 Cities For Telephone Discussion

Bnai Brith is inaugurating a new dimension in adult education, linking 14 study groups in 13 cities for a lecture and discussion by telephone. Seven hundred persons, most of them gathered in small groups in private living rooms scattered across the U.S., will hear Rabbi Morris Adler, chairman of Bnai Brith's adult Jewish education activities, talk on "Will Jews Be Jews in 2084?" Then all fourteen "listening posts" will join in with questions and a cross-discussion on the theme.

The experiment, designed to promote Bnai Brith's Living Room Learning project of informal Jewish study among adults, is the first use of Tele-Lecture, created by the Bell Telephone System, for non-classroom adult education. It is made possible by an expansion and amplification of the long-distance telephone conference, so that up to fourteen groups can listen and talk to each other. Rabbi Adler will open the discussion in Detroit, Mich. He will speak before a study group in Congregation Shaaray Zedek, where he is the leader, using a microphone attached to an amplifier control unit that is hooked into the telephone network. A loudspeaker, about the size of a table model radio attached to a home telephone will carry his talk, and allow a fourteen-way discussion, to other groups in New York, Chicago, Washington, Miami, Memphis, and New Orleans; and in Jackson, Miss.; Austin, Tex.; Huntsville, Ala.; Beaufort, S.C.; and Charlotte, and Goldsboro, N.C.

The program's speaker and its moderator will be separated by four hundred miles. Dr. Louis L. Kaplan, president of Baltimore Hebrew College, will moderate the question and discussion period from Bnai Brith headquarters in Washington, D.C. Each of the other twelve groups will have a local moderator to direct the flow of questions and views. The discussion theme is based on a symposium published in "Jewish Heritage," a Bnai Brith adult education magazine, which presented the predictions of fourteen prominent Jewish scholars on the future of the American Jewish community in the next 120 years. Bnai Brith is celebrating its 120th anniversary this year.

Rabbi Adler, in a lead article prophesying an expanding religious revival, expressed the optimism that "Jews will remain Jews" and will identify themselves more readily as members of a "religious community" that will grow stronger in the next century. Other predictions in the symposium ranged from modified agreement with Rabbi Adler to the strongly opposite views that the American Jewish community will disappear within a century.

Bnai Brith adult education leaders expect that such divergence of opinion, and the controversial nature of the theme will evoke a lively telephone debate.

The Overlooked Role Of The Jewish Immigrant Woman

By Moshe Starkman, in Point Of View, of The Workmen's Circle Call, of the Jewish Labor Committee

In delineating the epic of the Jewish immigrant in America, the role of the Jewish woman has somehow been overlooked. In the following piece, Mr. Starkman — an editor of the Lexicon of Yiddish Literature, a member of the Day-Morning Journal staff, and a frequent contributor to Yiddish and Hebraw publications, suggests the lines according to which this role might be appraised.

During the latter part of the nineteenth century and the early decades of the twentieth, vast numbers of Jews from Eastern Europe emigrated to America and settled here. It is interesting to note that the forces of Americanization seemed to catch up with the Jewish immigrant woman much faster than with her men-folk. The men spent most of their time with other newcomers — in the factory, at union meetings, or in one's own store, whereas the women were able to pick up a knowledge of English and American ways and habits from their own children while doing their housework. The women also had better opportunities and more leisure to attend evening school or lectures at the neighborhood public library.

Many Jewish immigrant mothers actually "drove" their children into the professions. And though it sounds fantastic, many a mother decided while yet pregnant what the child-to-be-born should become. "If it's a boy" the choice was usually a doctor, dentist, or lawyer, or "if it's a girl" — a schoolteacher or a bookkeeper until her marriage to a young doctor or dentist or lawyer. Thousands of those Jewish mothers lived to see their dreams come true. These very same immigrant mothers took great care that their children should attend a Talmud Torah or a Folk-School so that they might know "first of all" that they were Jews.

In this connection it is fitting to take note of the heroism of the teachers, the "melamdim" and "lehrer" in most Jewish schools during the era of mass immigration. Those educators were immigrants themselves and not always prepared to deal with children who had been reared in the American environment, one quite different from that of the East European "shtetl" (town). In addition, most teachers were underpaid, and for several months during each year many of them received no salaries because the treasuries were usually empty and the easiest way to "balance the budget" was to do so at the expense of the teachers.

It was because of the idealism of those immigrant mothers and "teachers" that the spark of Jewish loyalty and devotion was kindled in the hearts of many Jewish boys and girls who had been born in the New World. Later, many of those same children tried to obliterate the "Jewishness" which they regarded as a sign of one's being an "immigrant" or "foreigner". In some cases this may have been a form of temporary adolescent rebellion, since a number of these young men and women became in time leading figures in various Jewish organizations and institutions, inspired by the Jewish values they had absorbed as children.

Among the Jews who came from Eastern Europe were to be found young girls who spent their early life in homes where poverty was the norm. Most of them worked long and hard, under the most trying conditions, to earn enough money to pay for the passage to America of parents, of young brothers and sisters who had remained behind.

And many a Jewish immigrant girl used her earnings and savings to pay the tuition fees of her fiancé who was studying law, medicine, or dentistry. The gradual growth of the number of foreign-born Jews in the professions at the end of the nineteenth century and the beginning of the twentieth was, in large measure, the result of the toil and of the inspiration of those young women.

Jewish working-girls added both idealism and romanticism to the trade-union movement. With their participation in various strikes they helped to inscribe some glorious chapters in the history of American trade-unionism. Many talented members of choral societies and dramatic groups were recruited from the ranks of Jewish working-girls as well as leading members of Jewish parties and organizations.

The more religious among them usually became active in the work of Jewish charities and educational institutions. Many, cultural-minded, later became leading figures in the establishment of Jewish secular schools and in the cultural movements for Hebrew and Yiddish. Quite a number of books and magazines in both languages were published in the United States with funds provided by committees and groups consisting mostly of such women.

Many of the early members of today's most influential Jewish women's organizations in the United States, such as Mizrachi Women, Pioneer Women, the Women's groups in the Arbeter Ring, and Jewish Labor Committee, and other similar groups, had been immigrant factory workers and some of them continued to work for a time after marriage.

Thousands of Jewish women in America are now engaged in such volunteer work because of the education and inspiration given them by their mothers and grandmothers. Now the Jewish mothers of today are trying to transmit to their own daughters and granddaughters the values, traditions, and idealism which they inherited from the noble women who preceded them. Jewish mothers are conscious of the heritage left them by their mothers, indeed, by the Jewish mothers of all the generations — from Ruth, of ancient Judea, to the poet, Emma Lazarus, of New York, and this awareness makes the Jewish woman in America the bearer of an obligation to her own family and to the entire Jewish people.

ing to stop Israel's plans for diversion of the Jordan River."

In the light of this kind of argument, Arab publicists have eagerly welcomed articles in the Soviet press praising the resolutions of the Arab leaders, denouncing Mr. Johnson as "aggressive", and warning against introducing to Cyprus forces drawn from North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries.

Some newspapers in Beirut carried banner headlines on a statement by the Soviet press agency Novosti quoting a Soviet official as voicing support of the Arabs on the river issue, says the New York Times. It said the Soviet people "had always watched with sympathy the heroic struggle of the Arabs in defense of their independence." "This time also the Soviet Union stands by the Arabs in these complex circumstances between the Arabs and Israel," it added.

ISRAEL GIVES JEW, POLISH GHETTO OFEICIAL, FIVE-YEAR PRISON TERM FOR AID TO NAZIS

the controversial Jewish Council appointed by the Nazis in Bendzin.

Judenrats were formed in all ghettoes by the Nazis, ostensibly to organize Jewish life but actually as instruments of Nazi policy. Frequently the Councils included recognized prewar leaders.

There has been bitter debate over the question whether Judenrat officials in the ghettoes were out to save their own necks or sincerely believed they could save some of the otherwise doomed Jews by bribery and collaboration. The court left the decision to history.

However, the three judges said Barenblatt's motive had been the saving of his and his family's lives and the avoidance of forced labor. To the extent that he used his position to help other Jews, he did so only when it did not jeopardize his own safety, they found.

In passing sentence the court said it considered the prevailing conditions and took into account the fact that Barenblatt had followed the recognized community leaders.

On the other hand, the judges also considered that the prisoner willingly acted over a sustained period against fellow Jews and fellow townsmen even when the implications of his actions were known to him.

Barenblatt was sentenced to five concurrent terms under a special law dealing with the punishment of Nazis and their collaborators. One count charged that in 1962 he led a militia force that routed children, aged eight to thirteen years, from a city orphanage where they had been hiding. They were turned over to the Gestapo.

Barenblatt was acquitted on two counts and five others in the original indictment were dropped. A slight, graying, well-groomed man, he appeared stunned by the verdict. "Five years!" he shouted, picking up a briefcase and slamming it down. "Why, Why?" His young bride of six weeks threw herself screaming into his arms.

Barenblatt, who went to Israel from Poland in 1959, had survived the war thanks to the Jewish underground, which smuggled him out of Poland. He maintained during the trial that he had worked closely with the underground and had been urged by its members to accept the appointment as chief of militia, says the New York Times. The judges dismissed that contention, finding that he began cooperating with the underground only after he realized that collaboration with the Nazis would not save him.

STAGE WHISPER OF JEWISH WITNESS AT NAZI TRIAL

European-style ledgers and business folders are arranged haphazardly. That was the bookcase built by Anne's father to conceal the Franks' hiding place from the world they knew was then run by the Nazis. They could no longer take the harsh and heartless orders from the overlords of occupied Holland.

Concealment in the house, with trusted former employees in the spice shop surreptitiously slipping them food, was the answer. The answer, that is, until the Netherlands was delivered from the Nazis. So, swing back the bookcase and, head lowered, move into the little apartment in which the Franks and their friends, the Van Daan family, lived. Anne's was a tiny room, which she ultimately shared with a dentist, Albert Dussel.

The window, looking out on a pleasant garden, was papered over and kept closed. No noise, less suspicions be aroused. It was a young girl's room, sequestered as it had to be, says Seymour Freidin, in the New York Herald Tribune. A newspaper photo of Deanna Durbin still sticks to the wall. In profusion, there also are a photo of Shirley Temple and one of the Wailing Wall in Jerusalem.

In the next room, which Margo shared with her parents, the Frank girls kept a record — in pencil and ink — of how they grew in two years behind the bookcase. Anne kept her meticulous diary and she tried — she was only fifteen when she died — to be stoical and philosophical.

The betrayal came, as even the people in hiding dreamt it would arrive. It was at the time that the Western Allies had landed in Normandy and were pushing their way into the continent. Anne and Margo — from the radio hidden in the downstairs shop — kept notes on a map. It showed how the Germans were falling back; the Allies advancing.

With a terrorized mass of humanity, the Frank family was deported to the Nazi camp at Westerbork. The young girl, whose demeanor must have been genuinely ethereal, never lost her faith in humanity that her captors sought systematically to tear to shreds.

After Westerbork — Auschwitz: a name that doesn't connote a town, but planned extinction and brutalization.

The bookcase door swings back gently and concealment is gone. Back in the room to the right of the landing, a bust of Anne Frank in bronze rests on a simple stand. "In spite of everything, I still believe that people are really good at heart," reads the inscription. It is, of course, a powerfully penetrating passage from Anne's diary.

There is truth in the beauty of Anne Frank's belief. But there is no beauty in the terrible truth uttered in the Auschwitz trial over in Frankfurt, says the New York Herald Tribune. There, a dismal diary of death is recited and forgetfulness is frivolously inhuman.

That house at Prinsengracht 268, in Amsterdam, can tell you why.

try of Welfare: handicapped children, underprivileged children on probation, children who have been committed to foster homes, young people in sheltered workshops, day centers for mentally retarded children and community youth centers. All of them are urgently in need, but there's simply not enough equipment to go around. It's heartbreaking to have to turn them away, and we try to give them each something, even if it's only a token parcel. The Council has been more than generous, but ...."

She waved her hands helplessly. "Besides" she observed, "there are the very legitimate needs of the regular and special kindergartens which are supplied by the Council warehouses connected with the Ministry of Education. They can't be neglected!"

Just what kind of toys are needed? I asked her.

"Things that can stir a child's imagination," came the prompt reply. "Building blocks, finger paints, colored paper for cut-outs. Toy villages and homes are good and so are dolls, large rubber balls, sports equipment, toy wagons, children's-sized tools and tricycles. We don't like fragile items, and a few things are totally unsuitable. I remember a pair of ice skates we once received!"

Though the job is often frustrating because of the inability to meet all the needs, it brings enormous satisfaction to the volunteers. Hava handed me a thick sheaf of letters, some written in Hebrew, some in a rudimentary English. I leafed through them. Though each was different, the theme was the same: "Bless the Council women who sent the packages." Many letters began with, "There are no words with which I can thank you . . . " Principals, teachers, social workers, youngsters — even tots too young to write. They draw pictures to express their thanks.

"Every day is Chanukah here," observed Hava, packing a toy stove into a box bound for a crippled children's home. "Many of the youngsters are starved not only for toys, but for affection, particularly children in institutions. Receiving a toy is important to them. Not just because it's something to play with, but because it shows somebody cares. It's like heart speaking to heart."

I looked around the small warehouse, wedged in between a store and a workshop on a small side street in Jerusalem. The volunteers were busy uncrating, sorting, checking, unwrapping, typing, and telephoning. Every National Council of Jewish Women Ship-A-Box seemed to carry the same address: "To the children of Israel, with love."
